

Performance Commentary

Renewed concerns over a prolonged trade war between the US and China dragged global equity markets lower in May. This also had a negative impact on SKAGEN Vekst's absolute return and, in particular, on companies geared towards global trade and general economic growth. Companies like Broadcom, Citigroup, and Borr Drilling were therefore among the worst performers in May.

Our positive contributors were mainly driven by company specific news. Norwegian holding company Bonheur benefited from the first sell-side analyst taking up coverage. The Russian energy giant Gazprom moved higher on the back of a 60% increase in the dividend and positive guidance on future dividends. Finally, the US finance and insurance corporation AIG delivered an outstanding quarterly result, demonstrating that the new management team's efforts to improve underwriting and costs are finally paying off. Following the recent market weakness, we increased our positions in Outokumpu, Danske Bank, Northern Drilling, Flex LNG and Gazprom. We still view global equity markets as attractively valued, particularly compared to the implied return of other asset classes. However, we do note that a prolonged global trade war would have a detrimental impact on the global economy and the stock market.
