Investment strategy

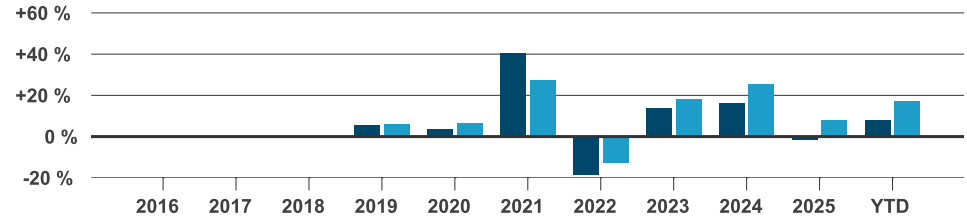

SKAGEN Global Lux is a high conviction equity fund that seeks to generate long-term capital growth by investing in a portfolio of global companies believed to be undervalued. The fund is actively managed, and the portfolio managers typically look beyond stocks that may be optically cheap to create a portfolio whose core long-term holdings are typically undervalued 'structural winners' which are expected to outperform competitors across economic and market cycles.

Risk profile (SRI)

We have classified this product as 5 out of 7, which is a medium-high risk class.

The summary risk indicator is a guide to the level of risk of this product compared to other products. It shows how likely it is that the product will lose money because of movements in the markets. A medium-high risk class rates the potential losses from future performance at a medium-high level. Other risks materially relevant to the PRIIP not included in the summary risk indicator: Event risk, liquidity risk, operational risk, counterparty risk, derivatives risk and currency risk. If the fund invests in securities in a currency other than the fund's base currency, the value is affected by changes in the exchange rate. In addition, the value of your payout may be affected if your local currency is different from the fund's currency. This product does not include any protection from future market performance so you could lose some or all of your investment.

Portfolio manager commentary, October 2026

The global equity market drifted lower in October as the AI trade lost steam and the market started to question the potential returns and rising costs associated with the giant data centre build-out. Equity markets were volatile across the globe. Turkey was rocked by a market-manipulation scandal, while the Indonesian market experienced the largest one-day decline in 28 years as index provider MSCI threatened to double-downgrade the country to standalone market status due to market dysfunction. Brazilian assets also took a substantial hit after the surprise re-election of President Lula da Silva. Towards the end of the month, the US market wavered ahead of the mid-term elections in early November, while Europe struggled with persistently high inflation and several profit warnings in the auto sector. In Africa, the Bank of Uganda raised its benchmark interest rate to 12%, while Ghana started testing cross-border interoperability for financial electronic assets with Nigeria and Rwanda.

SKAGEN Global delivered exceptionally strong relative returns in October, outperforming its global equity benchmark index by a wide margin. In fact, October marked the fund's strongest calendar month of relative returns since its inception in 1997. We attribute the fund's substantial outperformance to several factors. First, SKAGEN Global has taken a contrarian view on the popular AI trade, identifying companies that we believe can be long-term AI winners but which the market has, at times, characterised as potential AI losers. We base our assessment on fundamental analysis and a long-term view of their competitive positions. Going against the crowd can test investors' patience, as we experienced earlier in the year, but contrarian investing has been central to SKAGEN's philosophy since its foundation. Second, SKAGEN Global maintains a concentrated portfolio of approximately 30 carefully selected holdings with a diverse set of underlying economic drivers. We believe that active managers should stay active and avoid benchmark-hugging. SKAGEN Global therefore looks very different from its benchmark, a prerequisite for delivering outperformance while also providing differentiated exposure for investors who combine active and passive strategies in their broader global portfolios. The leading Swedish financial newspaper Dagens Industri recently highlighted SKAGEN Global as one of the global equity funds in Sweden with the highest active share at 92%. Third, the majority of our portfolio companies reported good Q3 earnings in October, with many rewarded by the market for demonstrating consistent strategy execution, cost and pricing discipline, and resilience in the face of potential technological disruption. These characteristics are important in inflationary markets to shield companies from margin compression – a risk that many of the fund's companies successfully mitigate through their high degree of pricing power.

The fund's three best performers measured by absolute return contribution were RELX, TMX Group and Thomson Reuters. Both RELX and Thomson Reuters were heavily penalised earlier in the year during the AI-scare trade, but have since recovered as solid financial results have, so far, challenged the view that AI poses a fundamental threat to their business models. As SKAGEN Global has highlighted throughout the year, we believe these companies are well positioned to benefit from AI over time. The market is slowly beginning to recognise this, and we continue to see attractive upside in both positions. The Canadian stock exchange operator TMX Group continues to deliver according to its compelling long-term roadmap, supported by strong strategic execution under CEO John McKenzie.

The fund's three largest detractors measured by absolute return contribution were Alphabet (Google), Aegon and Hermes. Alphabet fell after broadly missing market expectations and will need time to rebuild credibility. Aegon pulled back on no particular news – we trimmed the position earlier in the year on valuation grounds – while Hermes, like many other luxury names, continues to face weakness in China. We will comment on key portfolio activity, if any, at the end of the quarter.

Investment performance rarely develops in a linear fashion. For patient, long-term investors, periods of short-term volatility are an inevitable part of investing in undervalued companies and allowing investment cases to develop. Conversely, investors who impatiently jump from one hot sector to another are unlikely to do well over time. SKAGEN Global continues to take a long-term view, seeking to build wealth through fundamental analysis while maintaining a focus on downside risk to protect against permanent loss of capital. We also recognise that markets move in cycles and that periods of strong performance may be followed by weaker ones. Our focus therefore remains on applying our investment process consistently over time and delivering attractive risk-adjusted returns for SKAGEN Global's unitholders.

Sustainability

SKAGEN's approach to sustainability

Our ESG approach is built on four pillars. In keeping with SKAGEN's active investment philosophy, our sustainability activities centre on active engagement with our holding companies, which is where we believe we can have the greatest impact. We recognise, however, that the full potential of a sustainable investment strategy is best realised when combining the following four pillars.

- ✓ Exclusion
- ✓ Enhanced due diligence
- ✓ ESG factsheet
- ✓ Active ownership

Article 8

Sustainable Finance Disclosure Regulation (SFDR)

The product promotes environmental and social characteristics by directing its capital towards companies and issuers that meet defined ESG (environmental, social and governance) criteria. This is achieved through compliance with international norms and conventions, by taking into account negative impacts on sustainable development (PAI) and through product- or activity-based exclusions. See the prospectus for more information on the products sustainability characteristics.
