Investment strategy

The fund selects undervalued companies from around the world, including emerging markets, with attractive risk-reward for long-term investors. The fund is suitable for those with at least a five year investment horizon. Subscriptions are made in fund units and not directly in stocks or other securities. The benchmark reflects the fund's investment mandate. Since the fund is actively managed, the portfolio will deviate from the composition of the benchmark.

Risk profile (SRRI)

We have classified this product as 5 out of 7, which is a medium-high risk class.

The summary risk indicator is a guide to the level of risk of this product compared to other products. It shows how likely it is that the product will lose money because of movements in the markets. A medium-high risk class rates the potential losses from future performance at a medium-high level. Other risks materially relevant to the PRIIP not included in the summary risk indicator: Event risk, liquidity risk, operational risk, counterparty risk, derivatives risk and currency risk. If the fund invests in securities in a currency other than the fund's base currency, the value is affected by changes in the exchange rate. In addition, the value of your payout may be affected if your local currency is different from the fund's currency. This product does not include any protection from future market performance so you could lose some or all of your investment.

Q2 commentary, June 2026

Global equity markets staged a strong recovery in Q2 as fears of armed conflict in Iran subsided and optimism returned despite sluggish consumer sentiment. The AI and data centre boom continued unabated, with the Philadelphia Semiconductor Index soaring nearly 90%, although the AI trade showed early signs of exhaustion towards quarter-end. The bond market has taken note of the inflationary pressures around the globe, pushing the US 10-year government bond yield up from 4.0% to 4.4%. In commodities, Brent oil declined from $118/bbl to $73/bbl. Gold, which we have previously highlighted as overvalued, retreated and briefly dipped below $4,000/oz for the first time since November 2024. The precious metal is now down 25% from its late-January peak, but in our view remains overvalued.

SKAGEN Global underperformed its benchmark index in Q2. The fund's more defensive positioning and lack of technology exposure, reflecting our view that AI-related stocks remain overvalued, meant it did not keep pace with the Technology-led market rally. The fund's three best performers by absolute return contribution in Q2 were Aegon, Alphabet (Google) and Canadian Pacific. The Dutch life insurer Aegon continues its idiosyncratic transformation story, including a re-domiciliation to the US. Team SG held an engagement meeting with Aegon to discuss the implications of the move, as most of the business is already based there. We believe the process is well underway and likely to follow the planned timeline. Alphabet has emerged as a leader in the AI race and is increasingly viewed as a winner. The company appears to have earned the confidence of Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathway and incoming CEO Greg Abel, who invested $10bn in Alphabet's $80bn capital raise in June. Early last year, investors were concerned that Alphabet was losing out to ChatGPT, sending the share price down 24% to $156/sh in Q1 2025. We viewed this anxiety as unfounded and were therefore not surprised to see the stock rally strongly in subsequent quarters, peaking at $399/sh in May. With valuation having risen significantly and sentiment turning bullish, we see less upside at current levels but have enjoyed the ride. The freight train operator Canadian Pacific also performed well. While North American freight markets have faced several challenges in recent years, the company has remained focused on integrating Kansas City Southern. That work is starting to bear fruit and the market is taking notice. Team SG travelled to Paris in early summer to meet the CEO during his visit to Europe and came away with a positive impression. We continue to see considerable upside in the stock. The fund's three largest detractors by absolute return contribution were Intercontinental Exchange (ICE), Abbott Laboratories and TMX Group. The exchange operators ICE and TMX declined without any material company-specific news, while Abbott Laboratories fell alongside peers in the medical device sector.

In Q2, the fund initiated a position in the Japanese trading house Sumitomo and exited its holding in the US LTL carrier Old Dominion Freight Line. Sumitomo is Japan's fifth-largest trading house, operating globally across trade, investment and operations to optimise complex supply chains and industrial infrastructure. Under new leadership, the company has accelerated its structural shift from a cyclical, commodity-driven business focused on industrial metals to a higher-value industrial conglomerate. The market appears to underestimate Sumitomo's ability to accelerate asset turnover and restore margins through its focus on digital solutions, mobility and urban development. Old Dominion Freight Line has been part of SKAGEN Global's portfolio for more than seven years. During that time, it delivered a total shareholder return of over 350% (US$), more than double the return of the benchmark index. The stock was relatively unpopular when we initiated the position, but our contrarian investment thesis paid off handsomely over time. As valuation became increasingly stretched, we substantially reduced the position and have now exited completely. We also reduced our holding in Alphabet on valuation grounds, as discussed above.

Greed and fear are powerful emotions in the investment world. The current AI boom has attracted huge amounts of capital to a relatively small number of technology companies, pushing valuations far above fair value, in our view. We have previously highlighted that generating attractive returns on the enormous data centre capex investments, which may total several trillion dollars in coming years, looks extremely unlikely. These investments are consuming most of the hyperscalers' free cash flow and forcing previously cash-rich balance sheets to take on debt, as the Big Tech arms race shifts companies away from their historically capital-light and highly cash-generative business models. The market initially rewarded the heavy spending, but more recently it has begun to question whether this capital allocation is rational. In a similar vein, the previously lauded "Mag-7" is now sometimes referred to as the "Lag-7", as all seven companies (except Alphabet) have underperformed the MSCI AC World Index in the first six months of the year. One possible outcome is a prolonged period in which air slowly leaks out of the AI bubble and its overvalued constituents, rather than a dramatic market crash. But trying to predict markets is futile. The only thing we know for sure is that misallocated capital is eventually washed out. In July 2007, Citibank's then-CEO Chuck Prince famously said, "But as long as the music is playing, you've got to get up and dance." Citibank's share price fell 97% over the following 19 months.

SKAGEN Global is not willing to get up and dance to the euphoric AI music at today's valuations, which often appear detached from fundamentals and, in our view, reflect excessive optimism. In short, we believe this part of the global equity market is generally overvalued, although value may still exist in a few specific names, and therefore we prefer to invest elsewhere. Performance chasing rarely delivers long-term investment success. Several of our holdings have been perceived as AI losers and have therefore lagged the market, but our analysis suggests they are well positioned to benefit from AI. We would not be surprised to see sentiment turn more positive in the coming quarters, as it did for Alphabet, helping to crystallise the substantial undervaluation we currently see in the fund. At the same time, we fully support the idea that investors should own diversified portfolios. SKAGEN Global can provide a distinct component of such a portfolio, but we are not an index-hugger. Investors seeking index exposure – which may well be an entirely legitimate part of a broader portfolio – should simply buy the index. As an active manager, SKAGEN Global offers a concentrated portfolio of well-managed companies with strong market positions, capable management teams and attractive valuations. As a result, the fund may deviate significantly from its benchmark because its composition is very different. For long-term investors, we believe SKAGEN Global can be an attractive portfolio component, particularly in today's market environment, where technology concentration in many previously diversified indices is at record levels and therefore carries materially higher risk than in the past.

Sustainability

SKAGEN's approach to sustainability

Our ESG approach is built on four pillars. In keeping with SKAGEN's active investment philosophy, our sustainability activities centre on active engagement with our holding companies, which is where we believe we can have the greatest impact. We recognise, however, that the full potential of a sustainable investment strategy is best realised when combining the following four pillars.

- ✓ Exclusion
- ✓ Enhanced due diligence
- ✓ ESG factsheet
- ✓ Active ownership

Article 8

Sustainable Finance Disclosure Regulation (SFDR)

The product promotes environmental and social characteristics by directing its capital towards companies and issuers that meet defined ESG (environmental, social and governance) criteria. This is achieved through compliance with international norms and conventions, by taking into account negative impacts on sustainable development (PAI) and through product- or activity-based exclusions. See the prospectus for more information on the products sustainability characteristics.
